We're almost half way
to our food drive goal!

Right now we've received about 200 cases of food - thank you! 110 cats eat six cases a day so we really need to get 500 cases to keep the pantry filled up and the cats fed!

Ordering couldn't be easier! Just click on our Amazon wish list. You can order one, two, three or even more cases of food. Thank you!

Have you spent time with our kittens?

Playtime - and purr time - never ends for William, Catherine and Elizabeth and neither does the joy of watching them play! If you're having a down day, need an energy boost, or just want a time out for yourself, tune and and watch these cuties in action!

You can watch them playing any time on the Zmodo camera in The Floofy Tail Room (House 2, Room 4). CLICK HERE! The login is admin@blindcatrescue.com. Password is password!

P.S. These little ones still need sponsors! If they steal your heart, just click on a name above to become a sponsor!

Maybe Santa will bring one to your pets!

Things we know that we wish others did, too.

As you're decorating, be aware that some holiday plants are poisonous to pets.

If you need it, the ASPCA Animal Poison Control Center Phone Number is (888) 426-4435.

Lily of the valley

POISONOUS PLANTS FOR CATS

Poinsettia

Cats may chew on plants. Cats love to climb and explore and it is difficult to keep plants out of reach. There are over 700 varieties of plants that can be harmful to your cat if ingested. These are 10 of the most common ones kept in homes.

Lilly

It is always wise to assume all parts of a plant are poisonous, though some parts may have a higher concentration of the toxin than others.

Peace Lily - Spathiphyllum

Kalanchoe

Dieffenbachia

Christmas rose

If you suspect plant poisoning in your cats and you notice any of the following signs, take your cat to your veterinarian immediately:

- Difficulty breathing
- Lethargy
- Drooling or difficulty swallowing
- Loss of appetite
- Vomiting
- Diarrhea
- Excessive drinking and urinating
- Fast, slow, or irregular heart beat

Anthurium

Chrysanthemum

Amaryllis
